What to Expect for Camping in May 2020

2020 has proven to us that Americans can fight the toughest of opponents... even the ones we can't see. Since the beginning of March, our schools have been shut down, our businesses have been closed, our homes have become our only haven from the threat of COVID-19.

We have all sacrificed something. Our beloved senior class will not be able to celebrate a traditional graduation, on top of missing senior trips, senior appreciation days and the most important aspect to being a senior... picking on lower classmen. However, they did get to record the longest senior skip day in history. Millions of boys and girls will not be able to spend needed time with their friends on the field, court, pool, or any other team activity that has been nixed.

Businesses have closed, and for some, that closure is permanent. Americans are out of work trying to depend on a government system to support their family. Our national treasury has been ravaged like a plate of Kiss cookies at the Till house and our Stock Market has been reset to 2008.

Americans have been given a plethora of rights by our creature.

Above all else we have the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. During this crisis we have been asked by our government to "shelter-in-place" which, in it of itself, is a request to suspend certain freedoms. We have complied.

The point of closing our economy down was to "flatten the curve", and that effort has been successful. Now that we are starting to open our economy back up, we must be very dutiful in keeping the virus from resurging. That means that we must continue to practice social distancing guidelines until the virus is eradicated.

Poor Farmer's has cancelled our Opening Season and Mother's Day activities and have established a set of rules that will be strictly enforced during this reopening of our campground. I expect every person on the property to follow these rules and report those who are not. These social distancing guidelines are being put in place for one reason, to protect those around you. Breaking the rules will be taken as a sign of disrespect to your neighbor and you will be asked to leave the property. Any person asked to leave the property for not adhering to the rules will also incur a one month suspension from the campground. I can not make this point clear enough. Come out to your campsite. Stay at your campsite. Keep everyone else off of your campsite. You are permitted to have a campfire as long as you are not gathering. You are permitted to take a walk, as long as you are not visiting other campsites. You are allowed to ride your golf cart, as long as you are not giving other people rides. These rules have been put in place in order to stop spread of that terrible virus.

In order to put emphasis on that point, the only other page to this chatter will be the rules. Learn them... love them... live them. Thank you ahead of time for being responsible for your actions and playing your part in defeting this global enemy.

We miss you all and are anxious to see you... from 6 feet away. Get your campsite in order, pack all your hand sanitizer and be ready to air hug everyone you see. Oh, I almost forgot...
